Amin's army 'disintegrated'

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP) — Tanzanian and Ugandan-exile infantrymen swept into the downtown area of the Ugandan capital of Kampala Wednesday night, sending President Idi Amin's cadre of Libyan soldiers fleeing into the countryside, residents reported.

IDI AMIN

Exile sources said the government of Amin, who has been accused of murdering tens of thousands of his countrymen, could fall in a few days or a few hours.

Amin's regular army had already disintegrated, the exile sources said, claiming the troops sent by Libyan leader Col. Moammar Khaddafi to aid Amin, a fellow Moslem, were the only force preserving Amin's eight-year reign.

Amin's whereabouts were not publicly known.

Nuclear hearing site undecided

SALT LAKE CITY (AP) — Location of a joint congressional hearing on nuclear fallout was in doubt Wednesday as Sen. Orrin Hatch's office announced it would be in St. George, then said Salt Lake City. Finally, a spokesman conceded no decision had been made.

The hearing, to be conducted by Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., is to examine effects of Nevada nuclear tests on civilian populations downwind from the tests.

Among those to testify are Utah Gov. Scott Matheson and University of Utah researcher Dr. Joseph L. Lyon. A study by Lyon relates the testing to increased cancer deaths in Utah.

More than 400 claims have been filed with the government by relatives of residents who have contracted cancer since the tests.

Plant workers to be monitored

WASHINGTON (AP) — The health of plant workers and people who live near the stricken Three Mile Island nuclear reactor will be monitored for years to come even though no increase in cancer is expected in the area, HEW Secretary Joseph Califano said Wednesday.

JOSEPH A. CALIFANO

But, Califano and other health officials acknowledged at a Senate hearing that they do not know enough about the hazard of exposure to low level radiation such as that released during the past week from the plant near Harrisburg, Pa.

Trucking strike continues

WASHINGTON (AP) — The nation's most extensive trucking shutdown, already hurting the auto industry, is likely to stretch at least into next week and raise the prospect of widespread economic disruptions, government officials said Wednesday.

In the third full day of a lockout of striking Teamsters by major trucking firms, administration officials said the impact was limited mostly to the auto industry. The government had no immediate plans to seek a court-ordered end to the contract dispute.

Airline negotiations collapse

WASHINGTON (AP) — Contract negotiations between United Airlines and striking machinists collapsed Wednesday night, ruling out a swift end to the five-day walkout that has shutdown the nation's largest air carrier.

Sources close to the talks said company negotiators rejected initial contract demands presented by the International Association of Machinists and Aerospace Workers and made preparations to leave Washington for United headquarters in Chicago.

Cartoonists to autograph book

Universe cartoonists Steve Benson and Patrick Bagley will be autographing their book, "I Am Appalled" in the BYU Bookstore from 10 a.m. to 2 p.m. today.

The book, published by the BYU chapter of The Society of Professional Journalists, Sigma Delta Chi, is a collection of cartoons and letters to the editor that have been published in The Daily Universe.

Benson and Bagley, both period science majors, plan to graduate in August and pursue professional careers.

"The book is a great souvenir for students to recall just how it was last year at BYU in 1977-79, as seen through the eyes and pens of two talented cartoonists," said Nelson Wadsworth, Universe executive editor.

"I Am Appalled" sells for $1.50.

Raffle underway

Marijuana initiative gets boost

BERKELEY, Calif. (AP) — Raffle tickets are on sale around town in support of an initiative on this month's city ballot to stymie enforcement of marijuana laws.

The prize: some high-grade Colombian pot.

This is the second time this avant-garde university town tried to limit arrests for marijuana smoking, but the first one ran into trouble in the courts.

Mayor Warren Widener predicts both measures will be approved. His assessment is shared by Berkeley Citizens Action, a coalition of about 100 community groups that has been a major supporter of both measures.

There has been no organized opposition to the marijuana measure, which would ban the city from spending money to enforce state and federal laws against the substance.

A similar initiative adopted in 1973 was nullified by the courts because it directed the police not to enforce marijuana laws. Supporters believe they have overcome that legal tangle by this time merely prohibiting the spending of money.

The measure specifically orders the city council not to allow city funds to be spent on enforcing anti-marijuana laws. It also orders the council to lobby for legalizing marijuana and to "seek to ensure that the Berkeley Police Department undertakes similar lobbying."

The proposal also says that University of California police "should adhere to the marijuana policy of the City of Berkeley as established by this ordinance."

Anti-pot penalty campaign treasurer Steve Bloom predicts 8,000 raffle tickets will be sold. He explains the prize this way: "We are saying that marijuana should be legal, and we're acting as if it is."

More than 2,000 signatures for the marijuana initiative were collected in this city of 114,000 residents with 72,133 registered voters.

whether you are behind the wheel, on a bike, or on foot."

"I guess it's the old 'Golden Rule' syndrome," Townsend says while starting the police car. "You should extend the same courtesy to a motorist when you are a pedestrian that you expect from pedestrians when you are a motorist."

It is now 8:10, Wednesday morning. Unhurried pedestrians obediently await the changing lights at the intersection of North Heritage Drive and East Campus Drive, while motorists, oblivious to the royal blue, unmarked police car, meekly bring their vehicles to a stop at the first flash of amber.

And there is, again, a certain tranquility in the street.

Academics re-vote to be held Friday

The ASBYU Supreme Court on Wednesday unanimously denied the motion for mistrial filed in the case which determined a re-vote would be necessary for ASBYU Academics vice president.

Student Defender Barbara Sue Lawlor filed the motion Tuesday, claiming Sharmon Smoot did not have adequate time to prepare a defense, having been named a defendant in the case "minutes before the trial." The Elections Committee was originally named as defendant in the complaint.

The trial was held over a complaint filed with the court that Dave Christensen lost the election because his name was listed second on all the ballots. Christensen lost the election by 65 votes. Smoot and Christensen will contend a second time for the Academics office vice presidency in a special election Friday.

ASBYU Supreme Court Chief Justice Chris Burdick said the court felt "the counsel for the Attorney General's Office was adequately prepared for the defense of Mr. Smoot." The court also determined the defendant had adequate time to file the motion for a mistrial before the court decision was announced.

"Smoot and those involved in his representation on this motion could and should have initiated the motion on the day following the trial, prior to the Court's decision," Miss Burdick said.

ASBYU President Perry Bratt said the re-vote would take place Friday, with four booths opened from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Bratt said the booths would be in the library, the Wilkinson Center, and the Morris and Cannon centers.

● Hang gliding popular in spite of 'high risk'

some control over the risk involved. "You can pick the risk. You can choose to fly only when conditions and locations are perfect."

But if hang gliding means taking a risk even with proper precautions, why do people do it? "It's that concept of simulating the birds," Rodrigues said. "Like surfing, hang gliding involves finding energy in the form of lift and riding it. It's a sport of feel and sensation. There are no instruments to tell the pilot his bearing while he is in flight."

People who hang glide come from all walks of life, said Rodrigues. "At first I thought it was the crazy man who hang glided, but now it has changed. Doctors, real estate brokers, housewives and truck drivers hang glide."

During the past three years the sport has gained popularity. "I wouldn't be surprised if it became an Olympic event," he said.

Recently the sport has branched off in a new direction with motorized hang gliders. Originally, the motor on the hang glider was made to power the kite into the air, shut off and glide down, he said, "but now the trend seems to be one of getting on and going where you want."

Though he believes that motorized gliding "is really going to take off," Rodrigues adds, "It's a lot more dangerous than regular hang gliding."

"The first 'hummers' (motorized hang gliders), were powered by chain-saw engines hooked on the back of the kite," Rodrigues said. "Now there are specially made kites and motors which make 'hummers' safer. The most popular models come complete with landing gears and joy-stick control."

He said motorized models cost up to $30,000 in comparison to $1,000 for a non-motorized glider, and at least 51 percent of a motorized hang glider must be built by the pilot.

"The motorized gliders must pass federal inspection and the pilot must have a student license, which involves registering with the Federal Aviation Association," he said.

Whatever type of glider a pilot chooses, Rodrigues is sold on flying it in Utah. "Utah offers excellent hang gliding. People come from all parts of the world to hang glide in Utah."

John Childs receives instruction in the art of hang gliding from world champion David Rodrigues. "We can keep lessons safe but not foolproof," Rodrigues said. "The main cause of accidents is pilot error."

This Utah State Highway Department machine straightens guardrails after accidents. It has been used in Utah, Idaho and Wyoming to "make old rails as good as new."

Guardrails mended for 25 cents a foot

A Utah State Highway Department machine makes a guardrail the easiest thing to fix after an accident.

The $12,000 guardrail straightener, currently in operation at the highway department's district six headquarters in Orem, can straighten guardrails for 22 to 25 cents a foot, said Myron Taylor, district maintenance engineer. New galvanized steel rails cost $2 a foot, he said.

"It's paid for itself I don't know how many times over," Taylor said. The straightener, mounted on a trailer, is used all over Utah and has been rented at times to Idaho and Wyoming. Tuesday the machine straightened 1,200 feet of guardrails in five hours.

Except for small wrinkles, there is no difference between the straightened rails and new ones, the district engineer said. "After the old rails have been run through the machine, they're just as good as brand new."

The rails are straightened by running them through heavy rollers powered by a gasoline engine.

Buck Rogers'

Sci-fi flick a winner

Buck Rogers in the 25th Century reviewed by Lon Wilcox

If you 007 fans, there is a new one on the horizon.

Buck Rogers in the 25th Century is the first film attempt of Glen "Battleground" Larsen. In some instances, he has mentioned that he was not to be involved in the Buck Rogers project, at first refusing then agreeing. With the quality he has presented with his other efforts, it is surprising that Buck Rogers is better than it appears.

For the sake of ending on a positive note, here are the weak points of the movie.

The opening scenes start out well, a good explanation of why Buck Rogers is still alive after 50 years. But it quickly dissolves into a strange opening sequence of sexy dancing on a large floor made up of mirrors. If you really don't dig that kind of thing, listen to the music. Larsen wrote it, and it's rather catchy.

The movie progresses, there is a double entendre in the dialogue. It's the very pretty Col. Wilma Deering. "I'd fly with you any day," she says. "I'll be right on your tail." The technology is rather low key for a sci-fi thriller, but the tongue-in-cheek dialogue makes up for it.

There are some kind of unwritten law of not having to have two robots in the movie? "Star Wars" had R2D2 and C-3PO. Buck Rogers has Twicky and Theophilus. It's not that there is anything wrong with these two, just that there had to be two in the movie. Listen closely to Twicky. He sounds like a bass cross between Elmer Fudd and Bugs Bunny. Because the voice is done by a woman, who does the voices of both characters.

Other similarity to James Bond movies is that Buck Rogers is only loosely related to the book and character it portrays. In fact, the relationship is so loose that Glen Larsen and Leslie Stevens have a paperback out titled, naturally, "Buck Rogers in the 25th Century." The original Buck Rogers started as a short story entitled "Armageddon 2419 A.D." in the August 1928 edition of Hugo Gernsbeck's Amazing Stories. In January 1929, Buck made an appearance as a comic strip character and ran until 1967. In addition, there were several movie serials made.

Then there is the acting. The evil Princess Ardalla, who spends a good part of the movie attempting to out-do Cher in wardrobe design, is stereotyped. She sways sensuously and falls for the macho Rogers in a big way. Her cohort in crime is Kane, an earthman working for the evil Draconian Empire. He is consistently wily and ambitious, willing to accept credit for success and transfer blame for failure.

Wilma Deering comes across as a true-blue feminist, cold, logical, and efficient. But by the end, she comes out with great dialogue. "I can be just as much a woman as the princess," she tells Buck after a successful space battle. The sequel promises great things?

The best acting comes from Gil Gerard as Buck Rogers. He manages to combine a womanizer Bond, with the humor-in-the-face-of-adversity of Steve Austin. But he does so with a lot of credibility.

Next in line for best actors are Twicky, the small drone that follows Buck everywhere and comes out with lines like, "Wow, what a great body," when introduced to the Princess Ardalla, and Dr. Theophilus, a member of the computer council. Theo is completely contained in a small round disc that Twicky carries around his neck.

The movie as a whole comes across well. There is a look of action for the young and young at heart, the special effects are well done (with some obvious similarities to "Galactica") and there is all the suggestive dialogue for the adults that will be right over the heads of younger people. Even the music works to enhance the total picture. In all, it's cute, a little campy, and fun.

New Bee Gees, Elvis Costello albums losers

Spirits Having Flown by The Bee Gees
Reviewed by Randall Edwards

Somebody has to say it: The new Bee Gees album is a tragedy. It's a sad affair when a singer or group dominates the airwaves with some kind of pop sound, and then by some quirk of fate, begins to take itself seriously. They become the self-appointed "leaders" of their generation, issuing "meaningful" statements, supporting "meaningful" issues and letting their music go to pot.

Saddest of all is that this has happened to the Bee Gees, who've been around as a group long enough to know better. The ads for Spirits Having Flown tout the Gibbs album as the "record the world has been waiting for" and indeed it seems that the Brothers honestly believe that this album, coupled with their support of UNICEF's "Year Of The Child" will set them apart as a global force for good among men.

It doesn't work. Mainly because the Bee Gees have forgotten who and what they are. The Bee Gees are a basic bubble-gum disco dance band — nothing more, nothing less, but they seem to have forgotten it on Spirits Having Flown. Classics like "Jive Talkin'," "You Should Be Dancing," "Stayin' Alive" and "Night Fever" have sent them to the top, farther than they'd ever imagined when they were the pained balladeers of "How Can You Mend A Broken Heart" and "Words."

So why do the Brothers Gibb want to stray from the best thing that ever happened to them? It seems that the Bee Gees have always really wanted to be the Beatles, or at least be taken as seriously by the world as the Beatles were. They cloned as closely as they could the Beatles sound in the '60s, failed, split up, tried again, failed and finally made it big by hitting the lowest disco common denominator with their Main Course album. But the identity crisis remained. After the phenomenally successful Saturday Night Fever soundtrack, which revealed the Gibbs as a force to be reckoned with, they remade the Beatles' Sergeant Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band, a dismal flop.

With Spirits Having Flown, the Bee Gees/Beatles identity problem takes another tack, this time in carrying on the "spiritual tradition" of the Fab Four, with a message of brotherhood for all mankind. We have "Tragedy" ("When the feelin's gone and you can't go on, it's a tragedy"), "Too Much Heaven"

RECORD REVIEW

("Nobody has too much love anymore"), the royalties of which all go to the aforementioned UNICEF program, "Livin' Together" ("Why ain't we livin' together 'stead of bein' alone?") and other equally innocuous tunes.

Aside from the obvious consideration that it is hard to take seriously any message sung in falsetto, the Brothers have made a tragic error in judgment. It seems that in their quest to become the world's musical United Nations, they've forgotten that the audience they try to speak to, which in the "hippie era" (where the Bee Gees started) would relate to such idealistic inanities, has grown up, become sophisticated and gone on. Instead of becoming their generation's prophets, then, the Gibbs come off sounding like a musical Marx Brothers.

Though the album isn't a total loss, even the two numbers which are danceable, "Search, Find" and "Love You Inside Out" are too overlaid with orchestration (in the former case, the Chicago horn section) and synthesizers to boogie to.

The Gibbs would do well to stick to the formula of dance tunes that has made them (and their record company RSO) Top-40 legends. If not, their next album might be an answer to the musical question "How Can You Mend A Broken Career?"

Armed Forces by Elvis Costello

New Wave has arrived, in full force. You can't really call Elvis Costello new wave — he hasn't been known to knife anyone or to throw up on his audience. He adds a class, an angry class, to punk.

Nonetheless, his music is strange. Strange by the mere fact of his vocals: scratchy, crude, unintelligible. Costello writes straightforward, dynamic compositions with biting lyrics, the core of which —

Aw, the heck with it. Listening to Costello is like brushing your teeth with ajax. Everything rubs you the wrong way. Vocals sound like he's near death, and his songs might have some social comment that every other music critic adores, but they're so poorly sung that you can't figure out what he's trying to say.

I'm tired of hearing critics defend Costello, and I'm too short of patience to try to figure out why. On the mere basis of enjoying some rowdy music once in a while, I liked roughly half of Armed Forces.

The rest of Armed Forces is lost in the demilitarized zone.

Harvey Pittel Trio Play. Harvey Pittel, Julien Fifer, Levering Rothfuss and Gavor Rejto, with John Rodby

Reviewed by Walter Rudolph (KBYU-FM)

Here's a contemporary album that's a real winner! The selections are superbly performed, well chosen, and represent composers all the way from J.S. Bach to Duke Ellington.

Crystal Records is a small company that has always been dedicated to providing repertoire that the major companies generally overlook. Much of that music is contemporary American, as is most of this album. But seldom have they come up with a disc as unusual, yet listenable as this one.

"New Classic Suite" is appropriately titled: a clever arrangement by John Rodby of the second flute sonata of J.S. Bach. The "new classic" part comes in the guise of three American songs ("Autumn Leaves," "My Favorite Things," and "If"), one of which is used in each movement as a complementing melody to the Bach sonata. Bach purists will probably be incensed, but it works, nonetheless, and provides some fine listening.

In an even more popular vein is the "Duke Ellington Medley," also arranged by Rodby. Eleven of the late Duke's most memorable melodies are presented as a showpiece for the three saxes of Pittel. And Julien Fifer uses his cello to fine effect as a jazz string bass.

Of the remaining works, both more traditional forms of serious music, the aria from Bachianas Brasileiras no. 5 by Villa-Lobos is marginally better than the Galway flute transcription reviewed here several weeks ago. This work just doesn't lend itself to transcriptions beyond the vocalized section.

The remaining piece is the only one originally written for alto saxophone — the Paul Creston sonata. The two Rodby arrangements make this an enjoyable album, but the Creston provides the reason to buy it. Creston has done as much or more than any serious composer for alto sax repertoire. (Golden Crest Records has recorded both this sonata and his concerto.) A self-taught musician, Creston's style is that of a twentieth century Romanticist and this sonata has just enough French flavor to enhance the French-invented instrument. Considered standard sax repertoire, the sonata is still seldom heard because of a lack of concertizing sax players.

In providing unusual repertoire, Crystal Records also provides performing and recording opportunities for some of America's finest talent. And that's particularly true of everyone involved here, especially Harvey Pittel. Already he is a regular soloist with the Boston Symphony and Los Angeles Philharmonic, and the New York Philharmonic and other major orchestras figure in his immediate future. The music presented here gives him ample opportunity to display his abilities. The other artists provide strong support.

Excepting the remarkable Creston sonata, this is basically easy listening, and of a first class variety. Sound and surfaces are both excellent.

University band will perform

The University band of BYU will perform a Mormon Festival of Arts concert Thursday, April 5, in the de Jong Concert Hall, HFAC.

The 51-member band will begin the 8 p.m. program with a concert march entitled "Coat of Arms," by George Kenny. The piece is constructed with fanfare motifs contrasted by smooth-flowing melodic themes, according to director Dr. Daniel Bachelder.

Each of the four movements in the band's second number, "Second Suite in F for military Band," by Gustav Holst, uses folk songs as a basis for its thematic development.

"Chorale and Alleluia," by Howard Hanson, opens with a chorale that gives way to the "Alleluia" theme.

Following an intermission, the band will perform William Byrd's "The Earl of Salisbury," characterized by contrapuntal texture and horizontal construction typical of Renaissance composition.

The band will also perform "Australian Up-Country," by Percy Grainger, who originally composed the piece for chorus in 1928.

The theme, according to Bachelder, was composed with expression of Australian up-country feeling in the same manner Stephen Foster expressed the American country style feelings in his songs. The piece was arranged for band by Glen Ciffe Bainum.

The program will conclude with W. Francis McBeth's "Masque," which was commissioned in 1967 by the State College of Arkansas.

Bachelder said the piece has exciting, driving, rhythmic motifs and a wide range of dynamic interest.

The concert is sponsored by the department of music at BYU.

American opera opens Friday

The music theater production, "Regina," based on the play "The Little Foxes" by Lillian Hellman, opens Friday at 8 p.m. in the Nelke Experimental Theater.

The production, originally written as a condemnation of merciless condemnation in the South, premiered on Broadway with Maurice Chevalier in 1949 as "Regina," written by Marc Blitzstein.

Blitzstein, an American theater composer who continually experimented with different combinations of music and drama, is well known for "The Little Will Rock," a landmark in Broadway musical history during the depression.

When he wrote "Regina," he was interested in creating a legitimate opera with three-dimensional characters. Lester Trimble of Nation magazine in 1951 described Blitzstein's originality as "a piece of music that has evolved for itself a subtle and complicated idiom... a mosaic of speech, songs and action in which each piece of all sizes can be fitted."

According to Mike Evenden, a senior in theater and cinematic arts and director of "Regina," Blitzstein has adapted his production to characterize Regina and several other characters very differently.

The cold-hearted Regina in Ms. Hellman's play becomes a more charming, flirtatious Southern belle in Blitzstein's version. She becomes less of a villainous figure of evil and more like a real person, a victim of her own ruthlessness.

"Foxes" is a melodrama," said Ms. Hellman of the play, based partly on her personal experience with her own family, but "Regina" has much more comedy and richer characterization. Ms. Hellman recognized "Regina" as "the most interesting of American operas."

The music for "Regina" will be directed by Martin Smith. Bruce Duerden is scenic designer.

Further performances following the opening Friday will be Saturday, and next Tuesday through Thursday. Tickets are available at the Music Office, HFAC.

Laura Beecroft plays the title role in the BYU production of the opera Regina, which opens April 6 at 8 p.m. in the Nelke Experimental Theater, HFAC.

BYU films win religion award

CECIL CARROLL
Diverse Staff Writer

Three BYU-produced films have won awards in the annual film festival presented by the Association of American Educators in London.

Dr. J. HER, a national affiliate of the Association of American Educational Communications and Technology, includes film and media directors for a number of the denominations in the United States," according to J. U. Stoddard, director of BYU's Media Marketing. The films were judged at the annual Theological Film Festival at Oak Brook, Ill.

BYU received awards in three different categories. In the category of education, "John Baker's Last Race" received a Gold Award, the highest award presented by AMER. In the category of social issues, "The Mailbox" won a Silver award and in the open category "The Bridge" won a Silver award.

"These awards are the 70th, 71st and 72nd national and international awards BYU has won in the last eight years," Stoddard said.

These awards were not the first for "John Baker's Last Race" or "The Mailbox." "John Baker's Last Race" has won many national awards, including "The Gold Camera" at the Chicago Industrial Film Festival and the CHRIS Statuette, from the Columbus Film Festival.

"The Mailbox" has won the highest awards in six national film festivals.

"The thing that is exciting to me is the acceptance of BYU films by other denominations," Stoddard said. "A poll was taken at the film division of the Baptist Sunday School Board, and their audio-visual director told me that they found that 'John Baker's Last Race' is the favorite film in the Baptist Church film library."

BYU films have been shown before many diverse groups, including the audio-visual director and some leaders of the RLDS Church in Independence, Mo., the audio-visual director of the Lutheran Church-Missouri Synod in St. Louis, Mo., and the Chief of Chaplains Boards for the Air Force and the Army.

"All of them accepted me with open arms," Stoddard said. "A few years ago, not many in the church would have believed our things would be accepted like these."

"The comment, which we hear over and over again from religious leaders, is that BYU is the only source for films with such moral and ethical values." One group said, "It is just like Christmas whenever you come, because you bring so many wonderful things."

The BYU films cover different themes. "John Baker's Last Race" is a true story about a champion athlete, who is a coach for young children. He develops cancer and the doctors give him only six months to live. He fights it and lives for 18 months. During this time he worked to encourage many children. He helped not only the athletically inclined, but also those who were handicapped or shy.

A girl in the film, named Stephanie, was one of those he helped. "Fitness & Jogging Times," a BYU Media Marketing publication, had a short article about her. She was an

'Theater of Silence' presented

"Theater of Silence '79" will be presented tonight at 8 in the Madsen Recital Hall, HFAC, according to Dave Listter, ASBYU Culture Office vice president.

The group will present an hour and a half show of pantomime, song, dance and literature done in sign language.

The Theater of Silence was organized in the summer of 1970 at the Montana State University Summer Language Camp for the Deaf. Sponsored by the Associated Students of Montana State University Department of Speech Communication, and various schools and organizations, this unique drama group performs in Montana and annually tours 11 other western states.

The group is student organized. The theme and the production numbers are arranged by the individual participants who are chosen by competitive tryout.

Admission to the performance, sponsored by the ASBYU Culture Office, is free of charge.

'Memoirs' recount American years

ANN, West German
(AP) — Marlene Dietrich says most American actors she met with were "not very blessed" with fame, and that she came disillusioned to America after returning from war-ravaged Europe.

In her memoirs, Dietrich, 74, said she was amazed in the West German magazine, "The 74-year-old actress also says she fell in love with Ernest Borgnine at first sight and never had a true love since with the Nobel-winning author.

According to Miss Dietrich, her love for Borgnine began on a train sailing from Europe to the United States after the Spanish Civil War. But Miss Dietrich said their love never cooled because "we were simply never long enough together..."

She wrote: "He was a rock of Gibraltar. For years without him I was a drifting cloud, a vanishing like smoke and each year is more painful than the last."

Commenting about her work with Borgnine, she said: "The American partners in my Hollywood films were richly blessed with a better nature with a better sense of humor."

Her remarks were contained in the Berlin actress's book, "Marlene Dietrich, My Life," published in German by C. Bertelsmann of Munich.

"I will not say that there were no intelligent actors in Hollywood. But the really great actors were regrettably never my partners."

Miss Dietrich's leading men included Jimmy Stewart, who she said played love scenes "as if he had put on only one shoe and couldn't find the other," and the late Gary Cooper, star of her first U.S. film, "Morocco."

"The only truly great American actor with whom I worked was Spencer Tracy," she writes. "It was in the film 'Judgment at Nuremberg.' Sadly, my role was only small. But working with this partner was for me a great experience."

But most of her recollections of Hollywood's great names were not so flattering.

Among them was John Wayne, whom she met in the days when the future star was supporting a wife and two sons on a meager salary — "when he worked."

She said Wayne could barely say his lines. I helped him as much as I could. He told me that he never read books. Today John Wayne is one of the most important personalities in America and rich as Croesus. He doesn't need my good wishes anymore. He has made it without reading books. But one should not take that as an example."

She said the Hollywood institution of the Academy Award — Oscar — was designed to promote the products of the major studios, not to recognize talent.

On the eve of World War II, Miss Dietrich took U.S. citizenship and after America's entry in the conflict, she joined other film stars in volunteering for performances overseas.

"I felt myself responsible for the war which Hitler had caused. I wanted to help bring this war to an end as soon as possible... America had taken me up when Hitler's Germany had given me up. One cannot only take, one must also give."

However, when she returned to the United States after her war service she was embittered by Americans "sitting comfortably at home... who seemed unaware of the sacrifices of their soldiers."

"We returned home when everything was over - and we were greeted with nothing but dumb stares," she said. "The men were not allowed to enter restaurants without ties, regardless of the medals on their paratroop uniforms." Others returned from years of war to find that promises of housing and jobs "were lies, all lies," she said.

"I used to think that everyone knew what bombs, destruction and death meant," she said. "The well-fed citizens of the United States knew nothing. They wanted to know nothing."

Law competition

Y men 2nd in contest

Two BYU law students placed second in the prestigious J. Braxton Craven Memorial Moot Court competition, sponsored by the University of North Carolina.

Steve Anderson, second year student from Ogden, and Vaughn Crawford, second year student from Carson City, Nev., placed second among 24 competing law schools. This was the first time BYU has been invited to the eastern-dominated competition.

"Our case involved minors' rights, search and seizure. We had to argue ... the case to a panel of judges, who were free to interrupt us and ask questions," Crawford said.

"We won all our rounds until the final and then we were beaten by a team we had defeated in an earlier round," Anderson said.

"We were virtually unknown at this competition; even the desk clerk at the hotel was expecting someone by the name of Brigham Young. By the time we left, everyone there knew about the BYU law school. Von won the oralist award for his presentation of the case and we stayed on top throughout the entire competition."

Both Anderson and Crawford will be on the board of directors for the Moot Court competition at BYU next year. Anderson currently works in the criminal division in the Utah Attorney General's Office and has accepted a position in corporate law with Boise Cascade. Crawford received his undergraduate degree in English and has earned his masters in Public Administration. He has accepted a position in Reno, Nev., with the firm Vargas, Bartlett and Dixon.

Anderson jokingly said, "After our glorious win we almost expected to see Dallin Oaks and the Cougar Band waiting for us at the airport. Hey, we even ended up having to bum a ride off a friend of mine that just happened to be at the airport. So much for stardom," he said.

FDA asks consumer comment

WASHINGTON (AP) — Time is running out for comments on plans by the government to make available a list of generic drugs that can be substituted for brand-name products.

The Food and Drug Administration (FDA) is preparing the list of what it calls therapeutically equivalent drugs.

This means the same drug may be available from more than one source with some selling it under a brand name and others merely under its chemical name. The list would give the chemical or generic names for brand-name drugs that are available from more than one firm, so that pharmacists and consumers can select the less expensive item to fill a prescription.

Life insurance adaptable to needs

By MAUREEN RICE
Universe Staff Writer

Convinced by the charisma of the young life insurance salesman, Sarah, a dark-haired freshman, signed on the dotted line and paid the first premium. After all, everyone needs insurance and there's no better time than when you're young.

The insurance was expensive; Sarah couldn't really afford it. She was supported in school by her parents — with dollars for education, not life insurance. There was a better time.

Dr. Robert H. Bohn, professor of Family Resource Management, said students should consult parents before buying life insurance, especially if parents are funding the student's education. "Insurance needs for the single person aren't very high because there are no dependents," he said.

Bohn said students should ask the questions: If I die will someone need financial help? Is there some kind of health problem in my family where I will be uninsurable in a few years? If the answer is yes, insurance might be needed and buying a policy that guarantees additional amounts of insurance would be wise, he said.

Purpose to protect

Since the main purpose of life insurance is to protect surviving loved ones from financial loss at death, it should be determined who would lose. There should be enough money to provide for loved ones during the readjustment period.

Insurance is typically bought in an unwise and irrational way, Bohn said, adding that Mormons are not untypical. They buy because a friend or relative convinced them or someone they know through church told them it was a wise thing to do. "They have no understanding of the product and many buy the wrong kinds for their needs at the time."

Comparisons important

Comparative shopping is imperative in selecting insurance because there is a difference in premiums for the same coverage — a variance of 70-80 percent among policies, Bohn said. It is important for a young couple to take a financial course to learn of inurance, money management, taxation, estate planning, home buying, etc., so they can understand their overall insurance needs. Classes offered through the Family Resource Management can provide this type of information.

"Annual renewable term life insurance provides the highest coverage for the least amount of money," Bohn said. "It is the pure cost of insurance with no frills."

Most insurance companies push to sell whole life insurance because term insurance doesn't pay high commissions for the salesmen. Whole life provides the same benefits as term insurance but has a provision for cash savings. "It becomes a question of investing your money with the insurance company or with another institution of your choice," Bohn said.

Individual philosophy needed

The individual needs to establish an investment philosophy of his own through careful comparison and understanding of the conditions. "A competitive term insurance for a 25-year-old husband giving $100,000 coverage might cost $169 annually. Under the same conditions for the same amount in premiums per year, whole life insurance would typically provide only $10,000 coverage," Bohn explained. This figure varies with the premium, but a young widowed wife would certainly want the higher coverage in the event of financial need. When a family becomes more financially secure, then additional insurance coverage is wise.

Help available

Bohn suggests students working for BYU for a total of six months take advantage of a $30,000 insurance coverage for only $1 a week. By joining the credit union for 25 cents and a $5 share deposit, students can become life-time members and have this insurance coverage. The counseling center at the Ombudsman office can also be an excellent resource for direction in financial matters.

Financial books are available to provide counsel on personal money management and comparison of companies and financial institutions.

William J. Strong, BYU professor of physics and acoustics of speech and music, is conducting research to find a successful speech coding device that can be used to provide a speech-related aid of value to severely hearing-impaired persons.

ysics/acoustics research

New Y speech coding device may aid handicapped hearers

ECIL CARROLL
Universe Staff Writer

Imagine having a hearing problem in the frequency range of your voice so limited that a speech aid could not be — it would be impossible to hear the spoken voice of humans. A research project under way at BYU could help people with this kind of hearing impairment.

"A successful speech coding device that would provide a meaningful speech related signal could be of great value to severely hearing-impaired persons," said William J. Strong, BYU professor of physics and acoustics of speech and music. "It may enable them to communicate more easily via speech rather than by other means."

Many approaches

Experiments with this coding are just one of the approaches being researched in the field. In a report printed by the Acoustical Society of America, Strong wrote that this code was chosen "because it is comparatively easy to implement and it frees other senses to perform their normal functions."

A person with a normal hearing range has a crucial range of nominally 4,000 Hertz. The hearing impaired person that this project is intended to help has a limited range of around 1,000 Hertz.

"The notion is that a person who has a severe loss still has some usable hearing at 1,000 Hertz," said Strong.

"We are trying to compress the sound from the full band, and bring it down to the band where hearing still exists." The aim is to "milk out the salient features" and code just the part necessary for the subject to understand the message.

At this time, researchers are testing the concept, processing the speech with the computer in 'non-real' time — that is, it is not done at the same time as the talker speaks.

The project uses people with normal hearing to see if the message is still understandable after processing. If people with normal hearing cannot tell what the message is, then someone with a hearing impairment couldn't understand it.

Rhyme test

One test in use is called the Diagnostic Rhyme test. This test uses sets of two words which have similar sounds, such as: bob-gob, moot-boot, or keep-cheep. These are on a response sheet and the subject listens to a sound and must judge which of the two words was given. The sound is the speech after it has been encoded but not compressed.

After the coded sound is compressed, people cannot ask which of the words it sounds like. A discrimination test is then used. It gives the listener three sounds. Then the listener must say which of the first two sounds the third one sounds like.

"If the concept looks encouraging, the next step would be to build a coder to work in 'real' time," said Strong. Then researchers could start using both people with normal hearing and impaired hearing in the tests.

One purpose of the project is "to see whether speech can be coded and if the information is still there," said Donald Allen, a graduate student involved in the project. "Speech is a complex signal," and if much of the signal is lost in the coding it would make it difficult to convey the whole message. "One of the professors labeled it 'swamp talk,'" said Strong.

Panel discusses challenges of women as missionaries

By SALLY VEACH
Universe Staff Writer

Some male missionaries think female missionaries are nuisances, but Sybil Johnston says: "You just have to prove them wrong, work to your capacity and never quit. Let it be motivation to you."

Miss Johnston, a returned missionary from Houston, Texas, was a member of a panel discussion Wednesday on "Women as Missionaries," sponsored by the ASBYU Women's Office. Other members of the panel were Graham Doxey, former mission president in Independence, Missouri, and Mrs. Doxey; Mary Ellen Edmunds from Welfare Services Missionary Work; and Suzy Olsen, MTC Program director for lady missionaries.

Doxey said the way for women to prepare themselves spiritually for a mission is through their personal relationships with Christ. If women feel in their hearts they should go on a mission, then they should talk to their bishop and not wait for their bishop to approach them.

Mission calls are inspired by the Lord, Doxey said, and missionaries that are disappointed by their calls should not "give a minute's thought as to where they are going."

Doxey said many women missionaries return home and immediately want to find a husband. He said they should find other reasons for living besides marriage.

Welfare missionaries no longer have to be nurses, said Ms. Edmunds. After baptism there are many members who need help in staying active and applying gospel principles in their lives. The welfare missionaries are sent to strengthen these members.

Ms. Edmunds said welfare missionaries do not utilize the standard missionary discussions, but instead give lessons on family preparedness.

Ms. Olsen, who teaches women missionaries at the MTC about such things as make-up, clothing, poise and courtesy, said it is important for the women to be beautiful both inside and out. The women sometimes do not take good care of themselves while on missions because they get so involved in their work, she said. The women are taught hair care and given wardrobe guidelines on how to mix and match their clothing.

New engines to increase Provo city power output

Four new internal combustion engines have arrived at Provo Power and are expected to be in operation around the first of June.

The 12-cylinder engines will be used in addition to the steam-generating furnaces which currently furnish Provo's power, said Byron Dastrup, power plant manager. The engines will use diesel and natural gas for fuel that burns clean, said Leonard Madsen, engineering manager.

The four engines, which cost more than $3 million, can each generate more than 2,500 kilowatts of power, for a combined increase of more than 10,- 000 kilowatts to the city, Dastrup said. Considering the power which they will generate, the burners are expected to pay for themselves in five to seven years, he said.

"For the way they're used, they will be very efficient," Dastrup said.

"The engines will be used to generate maximum peaking power, which is the most expensive kind of power to buy," Madsen said.

"The engines will generate power during times of high demand and will turn on and off at different times during the day as they are needed," Dastrup said.

A participant in the biofeedback program has various monitoring devices to register slight biological changes such as muscles tension and body temperature.

Nervous about school? Biofeedback might help

By MAUREEN RICE
Universe Staff Writer

Have you ever found yourself nervously fingering your pencil before a test? You feel unsure and the pressure mounts. The exam is passed out, pages flip, you continue to fidget while ideas and figures flash through your mind and disappear.

Tension and anxiety are normal reactions to upsetting circumstances, but people often get upset or anxious even when little or no crisis exists, says Dr. Michael Maughan, counseling psychologist at the ASB center. Helping people to recognize tension, relax deeply and work creatively even under increased pressure is the goal of a process called biofeedback.

"With biofeedback, one can learn to better manage stressful elements in life," says Maughan. In biofeedback, internal body functions can be monitored so people can learn to control involuntary body processes like heart rate, blood pressure, muscle tension and hand temperature.

The biofeedback program, developed three years ago at BYU, lasts six weeks; there are usually two programs a semester. During the six weeks, students learn to control hand temperature and muscle tension by using machines to detect changes and help increase relaxation. "Biofeedback is a learned skill just like playing the piano," Maughan says. "It requires daily practice."

Tension headaches, associated with daily pressures common to students, can also be controlled through the use of biofeedback. "There were a couple of students who felt they could never really control their migraine headaches," Maughan says. "They tried the program and were for the first time able to abort their migraines."

Students can learn to relax internal muscles to reduce headaches. Biofeedback combined with other relaxation techniques such as meditation, talking it out, recreation activities or autogenic training is also effective. "Best results come when working on the machines two hours a week and then doing something else on your own on a daily basis," says the psychologist.

The electromyograph (EMG) machine, detects electric currents existing in muscles. Electrodes are pasted onto the skin over the muscle being monitored. A meter registers the amount of muscle tension so the student knows how successful he is in trying to reduce the tension. Internal feelings and thoughts are identified as the student relaxes more deeply. The student can then recreate the same degree of relaxation away from the machines. "Alpha brain waves are what you want to attain," says Maughan. "This is a deeply relaxed state."

Thermometer or temperature training is also an effective tool to help increase blood flow and temperature to an area where a thermometer is placed. By imagining comfortable and happy scenes, students achieve a warm and heavy feeling and the body relaxes. Hand temperature is a good indication of the degree of relaxation.

Students adept at biofeedback can move beyond reliance on machines and depend on body signals for feedback telling them when to apply relaxation techniques. "Biofeedback develops an altered state of consciousness to free up the mental and emotional states," Maughan says. "One can relax and come up with new ideas." This is the ultimate goal of biofeedback — to help a person work at their peak potential. They are no longer a slave to tension and fear because they have control, Maughan says.

Theta brain waves are imagery, says Maughan. When someone learns to create a deeply relaxed state "he can experience images, sensations and become refreshed mentally and physically."

When a deeply relaxed mental state is achieved, creative integration and reverie can take place. With the body and mind relaxed, people can gain greater insight and inspiration, he says.

Bruce Ellis, a senior in interpersonal relations, has achieved this degree of relaxation through biofeedback. Last summer, experiencing a lot of stress-related symptoms, Ellis began to practice biofeedback. Now he relaxes once a day to the point where he feels "a total weightlessness and a state of a clear mind with nothing worrying me."

Says Ellis, "I feel an absolute clarity of mind; it is crystal clear and I am in tune with myself." He at times experiences visual imagery, seeing colors or white geometric floating figures when his eyes are closed. Listening to music also helps him to achieve this state of relaxation — even different tones have different colors.

Creative approaches essential in teaching

By JORGE TEJEDA
Universe Staff Writer

Creativity is essential in teaching and it can be used in many ways, say the experts in education research at BYU.

"There are various kinds of creativity in teaching," said Edward Schneider, research psychologist for the David O. McKay Institute. "One kind has to do with the selection of content that goes into teaching." Some topics allow a lot of creativity in teaching while others don't, Schneider said.

"Another type of creativity is the point of view from which one approaches his material," he added.

A teacher can say "I am teaching you Latin" and not be too creative, or he can be creative and say "Latin is kind of fun — you will learn about the culture of the Latin people and how it has influenced the other cultures."

"The point of view you have toward the material affects whether the students can see any kind of novelty or not," Schneider said.

Plato's time?

Another creative point of view would mean calling on the students "to make them use their imagination, to transport them to places other than the classroom," Schneider said. A teacher can ask students to imagine living in Seneca's or Plato's time.

A creative teacher can "produce a certain amount of uncertainty on the part of the students," Schneider said, meaning that the teacher will try unconventional methods or give unconventional answers. This arouses students' curiosity and makes them pay attention, he said.

"Another way to stimulate curiosity is to evoke in the students' minds questions about the material," Schneider said.

Teachers on TV

Teachers can use new technology to bring more creativity and variety into their classrooms; some devices available include video-discs, 12-inch plastic records like stereo-recorders which play back television instead of music.

Computers such as the computer system called TICCIT have also been used. Here "the creativity comes about because the student can control the selection of the instructional components," Schneider said. "It lets the students do things the teacher needed to do for him before."

Individualized instruction is another way teachers can be more creative, said Edward Green, director of instructional development at the David O. McKay Institute.

"In most of the work we are doing at the university, we try to personalize and individualize instruction as much as it is possible to make it useful and applicable to whatever the students' main goals in life are," Green said.

Audio-tutorial programs can be highly creative; they are being used in some colleges already. "Audio-tutorial tries to incorporate the best of a laboratory approach, a lecture approach and a learning resource center approach," Green said. Students use tape recorders, handbooks and laboratories, working at their own rate and receiving constant feedback.

Classroom jokes

In order to be more creative, teachers have gone as far as hiring comedy writers or jumping out from coffins to get a laugh while making their point.

"There are levels of creativity that a faculty member can have. Any amount of creativity is useful, but we can go overboard," Green said. "Sometimes we tend to be too creative in the solution of our problem and do not rely on standard, basic information which is proven to be accurate and correct in most situations," Green said. "Creativity needs to be tempered with good practical situations in a classroom."

"There must be some direct information that is necessary and essential for people to know, understand, and appreciate," Green said.

Improved teachers

According to Adrian VanMondfrans, director of the McKay Institute, teaching research done at BYU uncovered at number of problems in helping teachers become more creative. The basic element of all the problems was that "teachers need to want to improve."

"If they wanted to improve, then it was a matter of providing the information necessary to improve — and they were really the best judges of that," VanMondfrans said. In this case, the problem was not creating workshops to teach the teachers to be effective — it was simply helping teachers acquire the motivation to improve and be more effective.

Creative teachers can learn to look "at what you want students to be like and what it will take to make them like that," VanMondfrans said.

Students are often re-

Local group demand efficient government

A committee working for "more efficient government" was organized in Provo last week by a BYU alumnus.

The Committee for Improved Management and Productivity in Government (CIMPG) was formed six months ago, said former student and chairman Gary Bensen; the committee is attempting to expand nationwide.

"CIMPG's primary purpose is to raise money to support political candidates who have proven track records as managers in the business community," he said.

"CIMPG is all volunteers," he said. "We have committees in research, workers for political candidates, public relations, and fund raising."

Bensen said a lot of money is wasted by the government and his committee hopes to help curb that waste. For example, he said "The Law Enforcement Assistant Administration, LEAA, spent $2 million on a prototype police car that would have made the designers of James Bond envious. The car was never put into use."

Batcats open WAC against Utes Friday

WAC baseball competition is here at last, beginning with a Cougar series against the Utes at Derks field in Salt Lake City at 1 p.m. Friday, then again on Saturday at 2 p.m. Coach Gary Pullins is confident about BYU's chances for a victory over Utah, and many more victories to follow.

When the Cougar and the Utes met early last month, BYU overpowered them with 6-5, 11-2 scores in doubleheader action. But Pullins is not one to count his victories before they're earned, in this weekend's competition or any other WAC competition, for that matter.

"Every team we play stands between us and the title," Pullins said. He is reluctant to say the Cougars will sweep the northern division, but acknowledged last year's 16-2 division record, and says this year's team is just as strong.

Major Cougar competition in the Northern Division will come from Wyoming, according to Pullins. "Their pitching has improved and they have an All-America first baseman in Greg Brock, who is a power hitter in the mold of Don Valgardson," Pullins said.

Down in the Southern Division, Pullins said "San Diego State gets the nod over UTEP and New Mexico. San Diego is a better team pitching-wise."

Of Cougar condition at the beginning of WAC competition, Pullins said, "We're not quite playing up to our full potential yet. Our hitting and running games are getting there, but our defense still needs work." He then went on to point out the team's bright spots.

"There are no serious injuries on the team," he said, "and we're very strong. Our weight training is beginning to pay off." He also mentioned Cougar batting finesse, especially evident in Cliff Pastornicky, the Riverside Tournament's most valuable hitter; Stan Younger, who was also named to the Riverside all-tournament team; and Marc Thomas, all-tournament player in San Diego.

Arthur Ashe faces tough odds

NEW YORK (AP) — Arthur Ashe buried his reed-thin, angular frame in the cushions of his Upper East Side apartment and tossed a magazine on the coffee table.

"Just reading a story by Roger Kahn in Esquire about aging athletes," he said.

"Is Arthur Ashe one of the featured subjects?" someone asked.

The frail-looking veteran of the international tennis circuit appeared momentarily taken aback by such a suggestion.

"I don't know — I don't think so," he replied hastily. "I haven't got that far."

Toll no knells for Arthur Robert Ashe, Jr., former

Fifteen months ago he was being consigned to the dump heap. Virtually inactive because of the heel inflammation, he had dropped to 257th in the pros' computer rankings.

Then came the long, lonesome fight back, climaxed in early January when he battled to the finals of the Grand Prix Masters at Madison Square Garden and twice had young John McEnroe within a point of defeat before finally losing a titanic struggle.

In the Indoor Pro Championships at Philadelphia, he knocked off Marty Riessen, Guillermo Vilas, Brian Gottfried and Vitas Gerulaitis to gain the final. He also swept into the last round of USTA Indoor at Memphis before losing a second time to Jimmy Connors.

"I've been no worse than the semis in any tournament this year," he said. "My aim is to win Wimbledon and the U.S. Open again."

Odds appear astronomical, but he has faced such odds before.

A black man in a white man's sport, son of a Richmond, Va., park policeman, he has had to storm racial barricades in one of the most forbidding of atmospheres — snobbish country clubs, official stuffed-shirts and chaotic administration.

Ashe has handled the situation with dignity and grace.

Now he is spurred by pride, not economics. He has won more than $1 million in prize money alone. He has a six-figure contract with a sporting goods company's tennis division.

He is playing pro of the Doral Country Club in Miami, parttime commentator for ABC-TV, regular contributor to tennis magazines and the Washington Post. He serves on the pros' ruling council.

Now, Ashe sees 20-year-old John McEnroe as the new Goliath on the tennis horizon and an early decline of top-ranked Jimmy Connors.

"McEnroe is the best player I've seen in years," Ashe said. "In two years, it will be McEnroe and Bjorn Borg battling for No. 1 in the world."

And what about Arthur Ashe? Don't count the old man out.

Bobby Clampett will lead the Cougar golf team in its bid for the championship of the Fresno Golf Classic.

Y golf team back in action

The Brigham Young golfers, who have had their share of problems this season, will attempt to get back on track this week as they participate in the Fresno Golf Classic.

The Cougars, who last won the Fresno Classic in 1976, will be going after their sixth first place crown since entering the California tournament. Last year the team finished third, behind USC and Oregon.

Coach Karl Tucker and company will have their hands full this week as the Cougars will have to compete with teams like San Diego State, UCLA, USC, Stanford, San Jose State, Oral Roberts, Oregon and Hawaii.

Leading the BYU attack will be All-American Bobby Clampett. Clampett will be with the Cougars for the Fresno tournament, but will miss the Western Intercollegiate because of an opportunity to play in the Masters Tournament in Augusta, Ga., April 12-15.

Clampett earned the right to be in the Masters by being a member of the World Cup team, where he was medalist.

Along with the World Cup medalist will be Tom Costello, David DeSantis, Tod Hensarling, Erich Gott and either Dick Zokol, Ted Lehmann or Jerry Rose.

Costello is a newcomer to this year's team, having transferred from Los Angeles Junior College. Three years ago, Costello played with BYU, but transferred and has since returned. In last week's team playoffs, the junior led all the Cougars in qualifying rounds, firing a 210 score for 54 holes.

This will be the Cougars' first outing since finishing fifth in the Pacific Coast Intercollegiate over a month ago. BYU's highest finish this year has been second in the Rainbow Classic in Hawaii. The Cougars finished eighth at the Pan American intercollegiate.

"This is the first time in recent years we haven't been ranked in Golf World magazine," Tucker said. "So we know we have something to prove. With the addition of Tom, along with some of our other golfers showing some good signs, we could finish okay."

Intramurals Information

The annual Intramural Road Rally will be held this Saturday at 9 a.m.

The object of the Road Rally is to drive the official course, set up by the Intramural Office, in the prescribed manner. The car that comes closest to the official time wins the contest. This year's course is about 40 miles long. Contestants will meet in the northeast corner of the Marriott Center parking lot, where instructions and directions will be given.

Intramural basketball games are heading into the semifinals and championship playoffs. This week the class 4-A teams in the Intramural League will play on Thursday night. White Lite will play against the Flying BB's at 8 p.m. on the main floor of the Smith Fieldhouse. At 9 p.m., Razz will go against Blues Brothers on the main floor SFH.

Finals for the 4-A teams in Intramural and Church Leagues will be next Wednesday night, April 11. The 4-A Church League championship playoff will be a 7 p.m. on the main floor, SFH. The two 4-A Intramural League teams will play for their championship at 8 p.m.

The times for games of lower classed teams are posted in the Richards Building.

The Washington Report

Stories used in this column are compiled from the Associated Press and other sources

Hatch wants answers

Utah Senator Orrin Hatch, has asked Attorney General Griffin Bell, to respond to statements made recently that possibly 10 percent of the federal budget is being wasted by fraud and corruption.

The comments were made recently before the Senate Budget Committee, on which Hatch sits by Deputy Attorney General Benjamin Civiletti.

In a letter sent to Bell, Senator Hatch asked the Attorney General to clarify Civiletti's statements that $5-50 billion is wasted by the federal government each year.

If the Deputy Attorney General's figures are correct, the federal bureaucracy may have lost to fraud and waste more than Utahns will pay in taxes to Uncle Sam this year," Hatch said. "With a $29 billion estimated federal debt for 1979, why can't we eliminate the fraud and waste and get rid of that deficit which is causing our inflation to spiral higher and higher each month."

No farmer's suit

The government has decided against suing for an estimated $2.5 million in damages caused by last winter's farmers' march on Washington, a Wisconsin congressman announced.

Rep. Henry S. Reuss, D-Wis., said he was told by the Justice Department that a lawsuit was not considered "fruitful" because of the difficulty in pinning blame on specific individuals, and the American Agriculture Movement, which organized the march, probably would be immune as an association.

The Agriculture Department has requested voluntary donations from farmers to help pay for repair of the damage. However, Reuss said only $1,831 has been received, mostly from farmers and farmers organizations and none from banks and tractor dealers.

Justice defends ERA

The Justice Department wants to take part in a Washington state suit that challenges the constitutionality of the time extension for ratification of the proposed Equal Rights Amendment.

The department asked the Washington State Supreme Court to permit it to defend the congressional resolution that extended the time in which states may ratify the ERA from March 22 of this year to June 30, 1982. Three Washington legislators filed the suit last week.

Marijuana helpful?

A federal court is being asked to force the government to make marijuana more readily available to cancer and glaucoma patients.

The National Organization for the Reform of Marijuana Laws said in a suit filed Wednesday that marijuana shows promise of relieving suffering for cancer and glaucoma patients. But the suit said the government continues to classify it with drugs that have no medical value. The marijuana reform group accused the Department of Health, Education and Welfare of violating federal law by refusing to act on its 21-month-old petition to reclassify marijuana.

SALT support 'shaky'

The prospects that the Senate will ratify the expected strategic arms limitation treaty are "shaky," says former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger.

However, Kissinger said, "The Carter administration, with a concentrated effort, can make it much closer and perhaps prevail." Kissinger declined to say whether he felt the proposed treaty should be ratified. He said he had not seen a text of it.

'Holocaust' fair

The National Broadcasting Co. did not violate the fairness doctrine in its broadcast of the mini-series "Holocaust," the Federal Communications Commission says.

The FCC turned aside Monday a complaint that the network had unfairly portrayed "a controversial issue of public importance" in its series on the extermination of 6 million Jews during World War II. Friedrich P. Berg, corresponding secretary of an organization calling itself the Ridgewood Group, alleged the fairness doctrine required the network to present the viewpoint that there "did not exist a German policy of extermination during World War II."

Sears suit an essay

The government is asking a federal judge to throw out a highly unusual lawsuit filed by Sears, Roebuck and Co. The Sears suit contends that government policies made it impossible to eliminate discrimination in hiring and promotion.

In a legal brief filed Tuesday, the Justice Department described the firm's suit as "a political essay, not a lawsuit." Sears, the nation's largest retailer, has had 1,500 discrimination complaints filed against it since 1965.

Nuclear reactors are his 'charge'

WASHINGTON (AP) — About a week ago, Harold and Lucinda Denton were watching "The China Syndrome," a movie about a power plant nuclear reactor gone haywire. He nudged his wife and whispered, "That's a faulty reading."

And sure enough, on the screen before them a moment later, the nuclear technician portrayed by actor Jack Lemmon discovered that a meter had been giving faulty readings and that his reactor was in trouble.

"Harold was impressed by the movie's technical accuracy," Mrs. Denton recalled Tuesday. "And by Jane Fonda."

Mrs. Denton hasn't seen her husband since last Friday, except on television, where his face and calm, assured, Southern-tinged voice have become familiar to millions.

Denton is director of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission's office of nuclear reactor regulation.

Last week, President Carter sent him as his personal representative to Three Mile Island when it became clear that a "China syndrome" situation could occur in Pennsylvania.

"China Syndrome" is the buzzword for the worst possible accident, a nuclear core melting through its container and presumably burning through the earth to China.

Denton has been in touch with the president by telephone several times a day and has briefed the press corps at the accident site whenever events warranted.

On Monday, when he announced the gas bubble within the reactor had shown a "dramatic drop" in size, reducing the risk of an explosion, his broad grin conveyed the news just as dramatically.

Denton has demonstrated an aptitude for explaining what is happening inside a reactor calmly and clearly enough to make people feel that even if they don't understand, at least someone of importance does.

Denton, 43, has been interested in nuclear science since he was in high school in Rocky Mount, N.C.

Lucinda Oliver, a high school classmate, became his wife, though they did not start dating until after both had gone off to college.

Denton says he attended North Carolina State College because it had one of the first university-operated nuclear reactors. But Mrs. Denton adds that it was also one of the few schools he could afford to attend. Denton's father drove a bread truck.

After graduating in 1958, Denton took a job in South Carolina with the DuPont Co., which was building the Savannah River nuclear plant that manufactures nuclear weapons. In South Carolina, it is known simply as "the bomb plant."

Three-month nursing class offered by Y

A 12-week, continuing education course in "Advancements in Nursing Practice" is being offered by the College of Nursing.

Berta Roland, coordinator for the course, said it is designed "to enhance current basic nursing knowledge, provide basic primary nursing skills and provide a support system for nurses considering the possibility of returning to the profession."

Classes begin Tuesday and will meet each Tuesday and Wednesday, except April 25 and May 30, from 7 to 9 p.m. in 2260 SFLC.

The course is approved by the Utah State Board of Nursing. College credit and CEAP credit are available.

Further information can be obtained by contacting BYU Conferences and Workshops, ext. 3556.

Mechanical deboning

More meat from cow?

By MAUREEN RICE
Universe Staff Writer

Billions of pounds of nutritious meat that would ordinarily be thrown out with the bones can now be recovered by mechanical deboning processes, says Dr. Clayton S. Huber, of the Food Science Department.

"If we could get every particle of meat, we would have better utilization of protein and meat sources," Huber says.

In mechanical deboning, a whole carcass, separate parts or coarsely crushed bones are forced against a screen or slotted surface of a deboner. The muscle and edible tissue pass through the openings, but the bone portion is shunted to one side. The meat emerges as a finely ground, paste-like product.

Such products are palatable, have a good shelf life and can be used as the sole meat source in products such as fish sticks and poultry hot dog.

Huber says he has examined and tasted several such products. "The bacon has an equal amount of meat and fat because it can be controlled — all of the meat is taken off and refabricated," Huber said. "There is no shrinkage and the taste is very good."

The fat content in mechanically deboned meat may not exceed 30 percent and the protein content may not be less than 14 percent. Regulations limit the amount of calcium and size of possible bone particles that may get into the meat products. "Pressure by consumer groups has held up the use of red meat in this process, but no big bone chips go through the very fine screens," Huber said.

Trace elements and levels of pesticide and antibiotic residues are well below safe tolerance levels, Huber said.

"The equipment is expensive," Huber said. "The plant in Sandusky, Beehive Machinery, which manufactures the machinery is economically important." That plant currently ships equipment all over the world because regulations are not as stiff in other countries.

The deboning process has been developed over the past 30 to 40 years and more than 200 million pounds of deboned poultry meat and large quantities of minced fish is now produced in the U.S.

Three government agencies are studying the deboning process for red meat and the possibility of legalizing the resulting products. Huber says such a move may be instrumental in lowering the cost of these foods without losing taste and nutritional value.

Women in politics to speak

By SALLY VEACH
Universe Staff Writer

Four prominent political leaders will speak on "Women in Politics" in a panel discussion today at 10 a.m. in the Pardoe Drama Theater, HFAC.

Norma Matheson, Amy Valentine, Anagene Meecham and Loneta Murphy will participate in the panel sponsored by the ASBYU Women's Office, said Susan Paxman, vice president of the office.

Mrs. Matheson

Mrs. Matheson, wife of Utah Governor Scott Matheson, has active interests in the Law-Related Education Program for young people and the senior citizen programs sponsored by the State Division of Aging. She is serving on the Utah Commission on Education for Law and Citizenship and the Utah State Bar Advisory Committee for Law Related Education.

She participates in community groups dealing with public issues and the arts and with both educational and charitable volunteer groups to maintain the quality of life found in Utah.

Mrs. Valentine is the Republican National Committee Woman and a Spanish instructor at BYU. Her service to the Republican Party includes active door-to-door participation, work as former Speakers Bureau chairman and service on the Utah County Central Committee. She has also served on the General Board of Relief Society for the LDS Church.

City commissioner

Mrs. Meecham is a Provo City Commissioner. Her record of public service includes two terms on the Provo Library Board, secretary and president of the Southwest Neighborhood Committee, member of the Metropolitan Water Board and member of the board of directors of the Women's Chamber of Commerce.

Mrs. Murphy is the Women's Rights Chairman for the League of Women Voters of Utah. She is also an advisory board member of the Women's History Archives at BYU, an advisory board member for the Provo Canyon Boys School and a member of the National Women's Party.

In the past she has served as president of the League of Women Voters of Provo Utah County and as public relations chairman for the state board.

Gordon Hunsaker tells how BYU has changed since he first attended 25 years ago as daughter Rhonda looks on. The 43-year-old father, a piano technology student, is enrolled at the Y along with his 18-year-old freshman daughter.

School is family affair for father, daughter

Twenty-five years ago Gordon Hunsaker was a freshman at BYU in general education planning on a degree in business. Unable to graduate then, he has since re-entered BYU and with his 18-year-old, freshman daughter, Rhonda.

When Hunsaker first enrolled at BYU he lived in the old army barracks. "Dallin Oaks was a senior when I was a freshman," he said. "I don't much of a student back then."

But he is back now majoring in piano technology because "BYU has some of the finest programs in the country, and I have always wanted to get a college degree," he explains. Hunsaker says he has raised his GPA from 1.5 in his freshman days and hopes to graduate in April of 1980.

When asked about the benefits of attending school with her father, the respective 1981 graduate replied, "I no longer have to scrape the car windows off in the morning." Rhonda, a pianist in special education, gave up her scholarship at Cedar City in order to attend BYU. "I changed my major from business and there was no program in special education there," she said.

Her decision to attend BYU was further encouraged by her father, who then knew he would be a fulltime student here, too. In order to defray the expense of double tuition and books, Rhonda works part-time in a supermarket while her father continues to tune pianos and work at Geneva Steel.

Hunsaker follows a rigorous schedule of working full-time in the afternoons, tuning pianos from midnight until 4 a.m. for his self-owned business and then attending classes from 8 a.m. until 1 p.m. "I am used to working two jobs and the schedule doesn't bother me," the 43-year-old student said. "My wife helps me so that I can have some extra free time."

Although neither father nor daughter have classes together, they say they see each other occasionally and may catch a lunch break with one another.

Home interiors reflect tastes

By MAUREEN RICE
Universe Staff Writer

Home environments should reflect individual personalities, and support people's lifestyles, says Ted Dansie, assistant professor of interior design.

Dansie, a 30-year veteran in interior design, says he would have left the business long ago if it consisted solely of making homes cosmetically attractive.

"I first started out creating environments I thought people should have," Dansie says. "But I have found it is a case of planning areas and creating life spaces unique to the individual."

Homes must conform to fashion and modern design, but the concerns of people are more important, Dansie says. For example, he once created a panel screen decoupaged with pictures, valentines and old programs for a widowed woman. The memories it brought back to her far exceeded anything else he could have done in decorating her home.

"We are always saying that the important things will be done within the walls of our own homes," Dansie says. "One can teach honesty, integrity, selflessness, love and compassion to children by integrating visual displays and pleasant associations into the home."

By obtaining a list of what a person enjoys doing, his hobbies and activities, Dansie is provided with the necessary information to design an environment that will express a person's personality. "Robert Redford's New York apartment has a myriad of displays and designs of the Indians from the old West, and Dr. Virginia Cutler, a world traveler, has an environment that is internationally eclectic and supportive," Dansie says.

Interior design is a learned skill that can be used even in apartments, where space is limited, to make significant improvements. "An environment can still be stimulating and interesting," Dansie says. "We can translate excitement into our home by colors, values and patterns."

Dansie's study in 1976 of Salt Lake City high school students revealed that students, under the pressure of exams, studied in the bathroom, because bathrooms provided the only place in many homes where seclusion and proper lighting were adequate for studying. Students at BYU often fall into this same predicament, but usually succeed — in spite of their non-supportive environments.

Dansie uses this study to illustrate the need for planning homes with family needs in mind. "Designers need to talk to their clients and determine the family goals and lifestyle in order to develop a supportive environment," he says.

Dansie, who has taught at BYU since 1968, is writing a textbook to be used in his classes. Entitled "Home: A Laboratory For Creative Living," the book will elaborate upon the principles of providing environments for supportive and creative living.

Assistant professor honored

A BYU assistant professor has received the "Service to Counselors" award from the Utah School Counselors Association and Utah Personnel and Guidance Association.

Dr. Eugene T. Buckner, assistant professor of educational psychology at BYU, received the "Service to Counselors" award, and Ronald W. Last, principal of Provo High School, received the "Friends to Counselors" award.

Buckner is a counselor educator and psychologist in the Personal Development Center at BYU. He has also been a visiting faculty member at Wisconsin State University and a personnel officer with the United States Air Force with the rank of Lt. Colonel.

Buckner is a member of the American Personnel and Guidance Association, and served as secretary of the Utah College Personnel Association.

Professor recalls Bible lands tour

By PAMELA MARTIN
Universe Staff Writer

As one of the directors of the first tourist group to cross the Allenby bridge from Israel to Jordan, Keith H. Meservy seems to have a flair for the unexpected. It was in March 1976, on a university-sponsored semester abroad in the Bible lands, when Meservy and Lamar C. Berrett, both instructors of religion at BYU, took 38 students over a bridge that hadn't been crossed for any but commercial purposes since the war of 1967.

"We got national and world coverage that day," Meservy says. "There were Israeli newsmen and American networks taking live footage. Our families back home saw it all."

But that was just the start. The group had planned a visit to Wadi Ram, the Jordanian national park where "Lawrence of Arabia" was filmed. But, says Meservy, "Only those in four-wheeled vehicles were allowed to enter." Since the tour couldn't meet the requirement, the state police commissioner met them at the park entrance and gave them a guided tour.

Later that day, a select group from the tour was invited to dine with an Arabian sheik of sheiks. "A sheik," says Meservy, "is a man in authority over many people, but a sheik of sheiks is a man in authority over many sheiks. And to receive an invitation from one is considered a great honor."

The meal, Meservy recalls, was held in a tent on the Jordanian plain and the sheik, who by custom did not eat with his guests, sat in the center watching them be served because "a host receives pleasure from seeing his guests well satisfied."

The main course consisted of a platter of rice soaked in sour milk with a baked sheep's head in the center. "We ate by rolling up the rice in our fingers, breaking off a piece of meat, and lobbing it into our mouths," Meservy says.

As the meal neared its end, the guests were offered an Arab delicacy — the sheep's eye. When one young lady refused the tidbit with a hasty "no thank you," the Arabian doctor next to her leaned over, dislodged the eye and finished it off in one bite.

Another honor came when the University of Jordan

Keith H. Meservy, professor of ancient scripture, displays some ancient writings he obtained on a Holy Land tour.

closed its doors for a day to give the Americans a tour of the facilities. Afterward, the group attended a special meeting where they and the Jordanian faculty could exchange views. "We gave a slide presentation on the history of the church and BYU," recalls Meservy. "It went over very well."

Although the visit to Jordan was the most eventful part of the tour, Meservy says one of the most pleasant experiences was in Egypt, "... sailing down the Nile in a small sailboat, a soft breeze blowing, the waves lapping up against the boat's sides, the boatman singing out across the water ... it was so peaceful."

Since that time, Meservy has taken two 10-day Bible tours, and a faculty service training tour into Central and South America as far as Peru and Bolivia.

"I gained a lot from these experiences," he says. "I can visualize myself in the place and situation of those who lived there." His hope is that he can share that vision with his students who, he says, "may possibly never know it except through me."

Special Y computers assist in translations

By KIM SMITH
Universe Staff Writer

The time required to translate church literature has been cut in half through use of special alphabets and a computer at BYU's Translation Sciences Institute (TSI).

The computer, made possible by donations from former BYU president Ernest L. Wilkinson and his family, will be ready for full operation by September.

Melvin Smith, applications programmer for the TSI, said the translation process, which used to take several proof readings and reviews, now only takes about two steps.

In the first step the translator does the first draft translation and puts it into the computer. The translation is recorded on a cassette tape or a floppy disc.

The recorded text is then sent to reviewers, who can make any corrections directly at computer terminals. All changes or corrections are recorded by the computer.

If the material being translated is to be printed, a typesetting command is entered into the computer and a disc or magnetic tape will automatically typeset the material.

Humans assist

The computer does most of the translating while a human translator determines the meaning of words which have more than one meaning.

In actual translation, the computer takes a sentence and looks up all the words in its dictionary and determines the meaning of the words.

If a word in the sentence has more than one meaning, the computer displays a list of the different meanings of that word. The translator then chooses the correct meaning for that context.

After the interactive analysis with the computer has taken place, then the reviewer begins looking over the text. At this reviewing stage the special computer alphabets come into use.

Smith said non-alphabetic and non-Roman languages pose the biggest translation problems. Languages such as Japanese and Chinese have several thousand characters that have to be programmed into the computer before human translators can work in translation.

Because of special characters that the computer does not recognize, the programmers have had to develop characters that the computer and the translator can work with in reviewing the text.

Special characters

Through the use of a magnetic plate which is called a "Bit Pad," and a special pen called a digitiser, they are able to create non-alphabetic and non-Roman characters.

A piece of graph paper is placed on a magnetic plate and then the digitiser is used to put a dot in every square that has been plotted out on the graph paper. The new characters plotted on the graph are displayed on a computer terminal screen. With the character on the screen, the programmer can change or create a new character similar in shape. The computer records the character and stores it until it is needed in translation.

AFROTC awards given to cadets

By ROY JOHNSON
Universe Staff Writer

BYU AFROTC cadets received national and local awards Tuesday at the annual Spring Awards Ceremony.

The ceremony in the Varsity Theater gave recognition to cadets for outstanding achievement and performance during the previous year. The new cadet commander, Scott Edgar, was named and officially took command.

Commander Craig C. Whitehead received the National American Legion ROTC Award and the Professor of Aerospace Studies Award for outstanding military leadership.

Mickey S. White received the Air Force Association Award for being in the top 5 percent of his AFROTC class. He received an award from the family of Second Lt. Reed J. Hall, a BYU AFROTC graduate who was killed in an aircraft accident while attending pilot training.

The Daughters of the American Revolution Award was presented to Scott L. Klingler. The award is based on dependability, good character and being in the top 25 percent of ROTC and school classes.

The Reserve Officer Association Medals presented for overall officer potential, were awarded to Thomas N. Nelson, Phillip A. Misseldine, and Lawrence R. Dingivan.

The Daughters of Founders and Patriots of America Award, recognizing an outstanding sophomore cadet, was given to Alan W. Crandall.

Dean of Student Life, J. Elliot Cameron, presented the General Dynamics Award for outstanding leadership characteristics to Kristian D. Skinner.

The Military Order of the World Wars Medals were presented to Brian B. Carter, Kim P. Wortham, Dana N. Willis, and John W. Richards.

Cadet Bryant C. Hafen was awarded the Sons of the American Revolution Award for all-around excellence in the AFROTC program.

The American Defense Preparedness Association Award was given to Ronald O. Purcell. The award recognizes a senior cadet with leadership qualities who ranks in the top half of his class and has a 3.0 GPA or better during his advanced AFROTC training.

Steven A. Morrell received the Armed Forces Communications and Electronics Association Award for outstanding leadership qualities.

Local awards include the Provo Elks Gold Cup Award, presented to cadet Rex A. Conner, and the 1st Lt. Fred C. Moscon Category 1N (navigator) Award to Robert H. Lemmon, Jr., in honor of a BYU graduate killed in a mid-air collision.

The annual Commandant of Cadets Freshman and Senior Awards will be given to Cary D. Belt and Jake T. Armstrong at the President's Parade and Review on Tuesday.

The AFROTC Distinctive General Military Course Award for freshmen and sophomores were given to Kim Wortham and John Alms.

The AFROTC Leadership Ribbon was given to Mark Roth, Roger Davis, Duane Jones and Charles Kettenring.

The AFROTC Superior Performance Award was presented to Marc Strickland, Tim Cordner and Ray Mathews.

This year's Angel Flight Commander, Lisa Shurtliff, received the Professor of Aerospace Studies Outstanding Angel Award. Jill Weenig will be the next Angel Flight Commander.
